To whom it may concern,

Having made my own linux kernel for further investigation into the security matter at hand, I will be deploying several different versions of this and testing its capabilities across a multitude of applications including OpenAI and its Codex, IBM's Watson, among other testable aspects of the multiverse. Certificates after certification mean nothing if I do not apply them in open-source avenues for research.

This year has been a stressful one at that. Though now, with some experience in the open source security world I can say I am excited to work on this and its Applied Mathematics roots for further Finance-based fruits as well as other securities based industries in the foreseeable future. Growing into a block-chain enabled company would allow me to gain the skills and meet the leadership that can build the world we see fit.

Appreciate the look,
